Non-governmental organization gives professional skills to people living with HIV

Beneficiaries were trained in serving techniques and etiquette

//

BRASÍLIA - On December 5, USAID/Brazil Health Program representatives visited a project of the agency-supported NGO Arco-Íris aimed at the quality of life and social inclusion of people living with HIV/AIDS (PLWHA). The initiative provides income generation activities and a more holistic approach to health and well-being for PLWHA.

Accompanied by the project coordinators, USAID representatives participated in a graduation ceremony for beneficiaries trained in serving techniques and etiquette, which are aimed at improving their access to employment opportunities in the food and catering businesses. Project coordinators are interested in expanding it and strengthening partnerships with local professional organizations given the demand and interest expressed by PLWHA in professional training activities.
