at pact, we believe that a world where everyone owns their future is possible. We work toward that vision every day, with each of our projects across 40 countries making an important contribution. We see the seeds of change growing in the young woman who now knows how to keep herself safe from HIV, the village officials who today have the tools to monitor and better respond to local conflict and the young mother who finally has access to the capital she needs to grow her business and better care for her family.

While we see this growth around the world every day, Pact is committed to ensuring our work is measurably improving the state of the world. So, for the ninth year in a row, we are pleased to publish the results of our work for the 2019 fiscal year, from October 2018 to September 2019. The pages that follow include results from our standard set of 14 global indicators that reflect our work across health, livelihoods and economic opportunities, environment and resilience-building, capacity development, governance and business and markets. As we continue to advance our mission of thriving, resilient communities where people are heard, capable and vibrant, we have expanded our measures to include a new indicator on our work to combat energy poverty.

Each of the following data points represents a seed of change—a person or community whose life has improved because of the work of Pact and our partners. Together, they build an environment for lasting success.

We helped connect 1.7 million people with health and social services, and we strengthened more than 200 health and social systems.

In partnership with communities, governments, the private sector, and local nonprofits and care providers, we improve health and social systems around the world, especially those that serve people who are challenged by stigma, poverty and marginalization. We pioneer sustainable health programming that places local communities at the heart of our work. Our programming builds on platforms of HIV/AIDS services, family and child health and social services for vulnerable children and adolescents.
With Pact’s support, more than 1.3 million people raised their income. More than 92 percent were women.

Economic, environmental and social resilience and empowerment are at the core of people’s ability to own their future, especially for women, youth and disadvantaged groups. Pact works hand in hand with the communities we serve, co-creating sustainable responses to improve their livelihood opportunities, resilience, human capital development and access to finance and markets.
More than 250,000 people benefited from improved natural resource management because of Pact, and nearly 1.4 million hectares were brought under improved management.

To make lasting change for the next generation, communities must have the skills, resources and opportunities they need to responsibly benefit from the natural resources around them, from fish to forests to mineral deposits. In partnership with governments and local organizations, we strengthen local capacity, build effective resource management systems and help people develop alternative and sustainable nature-based enterprises.

Pact helped nearly 800 local organizations, government agencies, networks and community committees strengthen their capacity.

To sustainably transform communities and systems, they must become self-reliant. Pact views capacity development as an inclusive approach, process and outcome. Capacity development must be intentional, go beyond knowledge transfer, rely on co-creation and co-implementation, incorporate innovative technologies in creative ways and agilely work within complex, adaptive systems. Pact’s capacity development work is holistic and intersects all of our programming to best meet the needs of our local partners and to bring them to the forefront in this process.
Our governance programming enabled more than 125,000 citizens to take part in 1,616 initiatives that resulted in positive civic and state-society engagement.

Inclusive, transparent and accountable governance systems are a critical building block for local development. Pact promotes constructive citizen-state relationships by empowering citizens to speak truth to power and supporting governments to deliver quality services and effectively manage public resources. We foster positive social dialogue to support communities and local authorities to resolve longstanding grievances and manage conflict. We also foster collaboration across communities, civil society, governments and the private sector to address difficult collective action challenges.
Pact projects leveraged business and markets as a force for positive change. We helped improve the lives of more than 160,000 artisanal and small-scale miners.

Using markets as a force for development means that communities have the systems and opportunities that they need to achieve the change they desire. Pact’s signature Mines to Markets program brings together government, industry and miners – both men and women – to make artisanal and small-scale mining (ASM) safer, formal and more productive and to address challenges such as child labor in mining. Pact’s efforts are helping to reveal and make the most of ASM’s contributions to development in communities around the globe.
With Pact’s support, nearly 35,000 people increased their access to energy and/or increased their means to use it productively.

Energy is an essential resource for all people. Without access to reliable, sustainable and affordable sources of energy, starting or growing a business, delivering modern healthcare, or enjoying basic comforts such as lighting are out of reach for more than one billion people. Pact collaborates with governments, companies, investors and other civil society organizations to connect supply and demand for energy, remove market distortions and work toward a future where all people can enjoy the benefits of modern energy.
