

PACT'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE Sustainable Development Goals

Sustainable development is Pact's goal. It is why we focus on systemic changes to build an environment for sustainable success and on building the capacity of local people and organizations.

Building on the success of the Millennium Development Goals, the Global Goals include new areas such as climate change, peace and justice, and partnerships. A key thread throughout the Goals is their interconnectedness – to achieve zero hunger (Goal 2), we must also address responsible consumption (Goal 12), decent work and economic growth (Goal 8), life on land (Goal 15), and more.

This interconnectedness is part of the foundation of Pact's work.

We strive for a world where everyone can own their future – where the people we serve are heard, capable and vibrant. We believe the way to achieve this transformational change is through systemic solutions built in partnership with local organizations, businesses and governments to foster thriving, resilient communities.

Sustainable development is Pact's goal. It is why we focus on systemic changes to build an environment for sustainable success and on building the capacity of local people and organizations.

For almost five decades, our integrated approach has addressed the root causes of poverty and marginalization through complementary solutions. While our key focus areas are health, livelihoods and economic opportunities, natural resources management, and governance, our programs span energy access, artisanal and small scale-mining, microfinance, fisheries management and child labor, among others.

By looking beyond the symptoms of poverty, Pact and our partners operate in the ecosystems in which people live and work to develop with them the skills and resources they need for sustainable development.
